

pâdas from the Mahânâmnîs which consist of eight syllables. When repeating the Vâlakhilyas verse by verse, he ought (also) to repeat those Ekapadâs, and the pâdas of eight syllables which are taken from the Mahânâmnîs. When he repeats, for the first time, the six Vâlakhilya hymns, then he mixes (viharati) breath and speech by it. When he repeats them for the second time, then he mixes the eye and mind by it. When he repeats them for the third time, then he mixes the ear and the soul by it. Thus every desire regarding the mixing (of the verses) becomes fulfilled, and all desires regarding the Vâlakhilyas, which serve as a weapon, the Vâchah kûṭa in the form of an Ekapadâ and the formation of life will be fulfilled (also).

He repeats the (Vâlakhilya) Pragâthas for the fourth time without mixing the verses of two hymns. For the Pragâthas are cattle. (It serves) for obtaining cattle. He ought not to insert (this time) an Ekapadâ in it. Were he to do so, then he would cut off cattle from the sacrificer by slaying them. (If one should observe a Hotṛi-priest doing so) one ought to tell him at this occasion, thou hast cut off cattle from the sacrificer by slaying them with the point of speech (vâchah kûṭa), thou hast deprived him of cattle (altogether). And thus it always happens. Thence one ought never to insert the Ekapadâs at this occasion.

The two last Vâlakhilya hymns (the seventh and eighth¹⁷) he adds as a setting (cover). Both are mixed. In such a way, Sarpi, the son of Vatsa, repeated them for a sacrificer, Subala by name. He said, "I have now grasped for the sacrificer the largest number of cattle, the best ones (as a reward for my skill) will come to me." He then gave ¹⁷ The order of both is only inverted, the eighth Sûkta is first to be repeated, and then follows the seventh.
